Patterns of Pathology

There are two primary patterns evidenced by the allied parent. These patterns tend to have a gender association, although not always.

Narcissistic Dad & Normal-Range Mom

One common pattern-type is a narcissistic father (Dark Triad & Dark Tetrad) and a normal-range mother. This is the “bad mommy” pattern and tends to have a higher spousal abuse orientation to it.

One common pattern-type is a borderline mother (Vulnerable Dark Triad) and a normal-range father. This is the “dangerous man” pattern and tends to have higher anxiety and false allegations associated with it.

The associated patterns of pathology are not strictly gender-based, but the gender of the allied parent is a typically associated feature, with pathological fathers tending to be Dark Triad / Dark Tetrad spectrum (narcissistic), and pathological mothers tending to be Vulnerable Dark Triad (borderline) spectrum.

I have provided two Clinical Vignettes illustrating the features of each.
